The manuscript is about the development of two new brief versions of CERQ and what are their relationships with depression and anxiety. In the work, we have tried to present two new brief versions of CERQ. The CERQ-S-27 permits a detailed evaluation of the profile of cognitive strategies, and where we have tried to operationalized a metric problem of Acceptance dimension. While the CERQ-S-18 makes possible an overall analysis of the individual profile of cognitive coping so that it can be considered appropriate as an instrument in field studies (e.g., natural disasters, violent acts, emergency situations) or as a clinical tool for screening or rapid assessment.
