

Editor of the journal Annals of Psychology:

I am enclosing the manuscript entitled "Coping with burnout: Analysis of linear, non-linear and interaction relationships of coping strategies" written by José A. García-Arroyo from National Distance Education University (Madrid, Spain) and Amparo Osca Segovia from National Distance Education University (Madrid, Spain).

The manuscript analyzes the linear, non-linear and interaction relationships of action-focused coping and emotion-focused coping and burnout (emotional exhaustion, cynicism and personal accomplishment) in a sample of 202 university teachers. This study contributes to a better understanding of the relationships between coping and burnout because the nonlinear analysis and interaction between coping strategies has been little studied in the literature, providing a new approach in the ways of understanding coping.

We want to state that:
