

About the Authors

MARÍA PILAR AGUSTÍN LLACH (PhD in Applied Linguistics, La Rioja) is a lecturer at the Universidad de La Rioja. Her main research interests are second and foreign language acquisition, particularly vocabulary acquisition in a foreign language and the factors that influence this process. She is a member of the research group on Applied Linguistics GLAUR. Her most recent publications include a monograph about gender differences in lexical errors and vocabulary use in the foreign language and papers in Atlantis, RESLA, and Studia Linguistica.

RAQUEL CRIADO SÁNCHEZ obtained the PhD degree in English Studies at the University of Murcia in 2008. In October 2005 she joined the English Department of the same university as an Assistant Professor. Her doctoral thesis empirically tested the effects on linguistic learning of the “Communicative-Processes based model of activity sequencing”, which was revealed as a pedagogic and cognitive sound alternative to the traditional Presentation-Practice-Production model. Her main research fields are foreign language learning and teaching, with a special interest in materials development. She particularly focuses on the applications from Cognitive Psychology and Neurolinguistics to language teaching materials.

CARMEN FOZ is lecturer in ESP at the Department of English and German Philology of the University of Zaragoza where she teaches Business English. Her current research focuses on the integration of ITC and language learning. Her recent work has appeared in Word, Revista de Lenguas para Fines Especificos and Specific. She is also co-editor of the book Teaching Academic and Professional English Online (Bern: Peter Lang, 2009). She is member of the English for Academic and Professional Purposes Research Group, whose latest funded project involves the development of a tailored multimedia tool to help professionals of Spanish SMEs with their communication in international trade.

M<sup>a</sup> ISABEL GONZÁLEZ PUEYO is a Senior Lecturer in English for Specific Purposes at the University of Zaragoza, Spain. She has a PhD in English Philology and has published widely on academic and professional discourse and on language teaching and learning in the field of English for Specific Purposes. Her work has appeared in several journals and books, such as The ESP Journal, Miscelanea, Journal of Technical Writing and Communication, LSP & PROFESIONAL COMMUNICATION and Estudios Ingleses de la Universidad Complutense among others. Her current research interests are the analysis of digital genres, especially those used in professional and academic communication, and the use of Internet resources and tools to design tasks for ESP. She is co-editor of the volume Teaching Academic and Professional English Online (Bern: Peter Lang, 2009).

MARLEEN HABOUD is the Director of the Linguistics School at the Pontifical Catholic University of Ecuador, as well as a Professor of Linguistics, Bilingualism, Semantics and Research Methods. Her research interests include language contact, language vitality, intercultural education, linguistic and educational policies, and language, identity and culture. Since 2007, she is the Director of the Orality and Modernity project which seeks to determine the vitality of indigenous languages in Ecuador and to work with local native communities in favor of their ancestral languages. Her publications include articles in the International Journal of the Sociology of Language, Typological Studies in language, Vervuert, Pueblos Indígenas y Educacion, Winak, CEPAR, UNESCO, UNICEF; national and international reviews, and a book Quichua y Castellano en los Andes Ecuatorianos: los efectos de un contacto prolongado (1998), and its corresponding English version, Quichua and Spanish in the Ecuadorian Andes. The Effects of Long-term Contact (2003). As a UNESCO expert, she was a regional editor for the World Atlas of endangered languages (UNESCO 2009).

MARÍA MARTÍNEZ LIROLA is Professor of the Department of English at the University of Alicante, Spain. Her main areas of research are Systemic Functional Linguistics, Second Language Methodology and Critical Discourse Analysis. She has published more than 40 papers and seven books. Her more recent publication is Main Processes of Thematization and Postponement in English (Peter Lang, 2009). She has been a visiting scholar at the University of Anahuac Mayad (Mérida, Mexico, 2008), at the University of Kwazulu-Natal (Pietermaritzburg, South Africa, 2006), and at Macquarie University (Sydney, Australia, 2005). She has presented papers in international congresses all over the world.

FERNANDO MIÑO-GARCÉS is professor of English, Spanish, and Linguistics at the Faculty of Communication, Linguistics and Literature of the Pontificia Universidad Católica del Ecuador, and the Andean Center for Latin American Studies (ACLAS) in Quito – Ecuador. He has taught English Teaching Methodology at several universities in Ecuador, and participated in international conferences about the Teaching of English in Spanish Speaking Countries. He is the author of Memories of the Third National Congress of English Teachers in Universities and Polytechnic Schools in Ecuador and of Introductory Lessons in English Transformational Grammar among other publications in the field. He also published Gazapos

quiteños y cómo evitarlos and co-authored Spanish in the Ecuadorian Andes: Conversation Guide for English Speakers. He is currently engaged in the preparation for the publication of the Nuevo diccionario de ecuatorianismos.

MARCELA MORCHIO. Teacher of English (Universidad Nacional de San Juan). MA in Applied Linguistics (Universidad Nacional de Cuyo) is a Lecturer in Applied Linguistics, Psycholinguistics and Teaching Practice at the Facultad de Filosofía, Humanidades y Artes Universidad Nacional de San Juan (Argentina). Coordinator of the English Department at Escuela Modelo de San Juan (Primary Level). She has published several articles on her different areas of interest: interlanguage, massmediatic subjectivities, TEFL in San Juan. She is head of a research team currently working on teacher development as a way to improve TEFL contexts.

FERNANDO RUBIO is an Associate Professor at the University of Huelva (Spain) and Head of International Relations at the School of Education. His main areas of research are Second Language Acquisition and Second Language Methodology. He has published “Self-esteem and Foreign Language Learning” (2007; Cambridge Scholars Publishing) and has authored numerous scholarly texts. He has been a Visiting Professor at the University of Virginia’s College at Wise (2008) and has conducted research at the University of Texas (2005). He has been a plenary speaker in many academic events in Europe, North America and South America.

AQUILINO SÁNCHEZ is Full Professor at the University of Murcia, Spain, where he teaches Lexicography and Applied Linguistics. He has written books and articles on methods and methodology of foreign language teaching and on Corpus Linguistics. He has also been editor and/or author of monolingual (Spanish) and bilingual (Spanish/English) dictionaries and has often been invited to give talks at different universities and in various countries all over the world.

MELANIA TERRAZAS GALLEGO is a Lecturer in the Department of Modern Philology at the University of La Rioja, where she currently teaches English, literary theory and criticism, rhetoric and English literature. Her research interests cover Language Learning and Acquisition (vocabulary knowledge, size and gender), ESP; Early and Late Modernism, Satire in Contemporary American and English Literature, Comparative Literature, Cultural Studies, Gender Studies and Irish Literature. Her most recent publications on vocabulary knowledge have appeared in Journal of English Studies 5-6 (2009; in press) and Atlantis 31.1. (2009). One of her last works on English Modernism appeared in Cunchillos Jaime, Carmelo (ed.) Wyndham Lewis the Radical: Essays on Literature and Modernity. Bern: Peter Lang. (2007).